

Omololu Thomas LLM, FCI Arb

General Information

Omololu is originally a barrister from Nigeria. He accumulated several years of experience in commercial, civil and admiralty law in Nigeria before coming to the UK to further his studies. In recognition of his practice in Nigeria, Omololu was shortlisted in the preliminary list of shipping and maritime practitioners in Nigeria by the UK-based publication "Who's Who Legal" in 2010.

On completion of his masters degree, Omololu applied for and was called to the English Bar in 2011. Since his call, he has been practising his trade in the Bar of England and Wales and has also become an arbitrator.

With a professional approach to his work, Omololu has a track record of litigation and advice in a wide range of criminal, civil, commercial and maritime cases. He regularly appears before the County, Magistrates' and Crown Courts and has recorded remarkable success in cases before the immigration appeal tribunals.

Omololu is open to instructions on maritime and shipping law having practised admiralty law extensively in Nigeria for a substantial period. He was part of the team in the landmark case that changed the scope of admiralty jurisdiction in Nigeria.
