A word from Luke Stillwell

"Before I embarked on my role as a mediator, I had been a party in legal disputes myself and have first hand experience of how frustrating, costly and arduous the court process can be but this experience soon changed when I was given the opportunity to participate in mediation. With a good mediator and both parties willing to try and reach an amicable solution to the problem at hand, it was refreshing to see just how quickly and efficiently a resolution could be reached with a commercial element able to be agreed which would not normally be a possibility in a court room.

With the present strain on the court system which has only worsened following the Covid-19 pandemic, mediation is more important than ever. Mediation allows the parties to not only explore and uncover mutually agreeable solutions without fear or intimidation but also to reach results which cannot be awarded in the traditional setting of a court room by a Judge. Furthermore, mediation can vastly diminish the cost and expense of legal fees and time which is an invaluable commodity of everyone's lives."
