

Dr Anna Loutfi (PhD)

General Information

Dr Anna Loutfi is a barrister at Clerksroom, called to the bar in 2019. She has a practice in employment, equalities and human rights law and specialises in freedom of expression cases, particularly in the higher education sector.

With over 15 years of experience in teaching and legal research in the university sector, Anna is a specialist in Central and Eastern European history and law. She is an expert on comparative approaches to common and civil law systems of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. She has studied Nazi and Soviet occupations through the voices of the Europeans who lived through World War Two and its aftermath. She does not take civil liberties for granted.

A keen advocate of diversity at the bar, Anna believes reforms in legal education are key to building a profession that is more representative of society. She is a champion of mature law students who have embraced risk and costs to retrain for the bar, bringing unique early career skills to the profession, as well as life experience.

Areas of law

- Employment Law
- Equalities Law
- Human Rights Law
- Freedom of Expression
- Higher Education

Appointments

- Research affiliation with the Dickson Poon School of Law, King's College London
- Host of the legal podcast series, The Verdict, interviewing some of the most important legal practitioners and researchers in the human rights field

Education

- PhD in Legal History

Email: mediation@clerksroom.com

Clerksroom, Equity House, Blackbrook Park Avenue, Taunton TA1 2PX